

Rumi

Small fires, lit on purpose. — Brand Bible

Where the name comes from

The name Rumi borrows its warmth from Jalal ad-Din Rumi, the 13th-century poet whose writing returns again and again to light, love, and quiet reflection — "Let the beauty of what you love be what you do." A candle is a small, physical version of that idea: a flame you light on purpose, in a room you want to feel different in.

The brand is built around three ideas, in this order of importance: light, not just scent — every product description, photo, and page centers on the ritual of lighting a candle before it centers on specifications; warmth over noise — Rumi earns attention through restraint, not superlatives; and made by hand — hand-poured is a fact to be shown (pour dates, batch numbers, small imperfections), not only claimed.

Premium, gift-led

RECOMMENDED

This follows from the luxury-and-elegant visual direction: a mid-to-upper price point, sold as much for gifting — birthdays, weddings, festivals, corporate hampers — as for personal use. It's a recommendation, not a fixed decision: if pricing lands closer to mass-market, soften the gold/wine palette toward lighter tints rather than rebuilding the system.

Primary audience

Women and men, roughly 22–45, urban/metro India, who already buy from D2C or aesthetic-led Instagram brands. They notice packaging and photography quality before they read a single spec.

What Rumi is not

Not a budget or mass-volume candle brand, not a clinical/wellness-lab aesthetic, not loud or meme-driven in tone.

Warm, unhurried, considered, poetic (lightly), honest

Write in first person plural — never a distant corporate "the company." Short sentences, one idea each. Sensory, concrete language over abstract adjectives: not "a luxurious fragrance experience," instead "cedarwood and a little smoke, like a fireplace in an old library." One quiet, poetic line is welcome per page — never stacked. No exclamation marks in body copy.

CONTEXT	TONE	EXAMPLE
Homepage hero	Warm, spare	"Small fires, lit on purpose."
Product description	Concrete, sensory	"Amber and sandalwood, poured into blackened terracotta. Burns for roughly 40 hours."
WhatsApp confirmation	Friendly, plain	"Got it — 2x Amber Dusk (large) for Aarav. We'll confirm your total shortly."
Error / out of stock	Honest, helpful	"This one's sold out for now. The Wine Ember jar is a close cousin — want to see it?"
Packaging insert	Personal, unhurried	"Poured by hand in small batches. Trim the wick to 5mm before each light."

Avoid

Startup-speak ("game-changing," "elevate your space"), all-caps sale banners, countdown timers, emoji inline in sentences.

Starting concept — not final artwork

No logo exists yet. Below is a first-pass direction for a type designer to refine: an italic serif wordmark where the dot of the "i" is replaced by a small flame. Everything else stays purely typographic.

Usage rules once finalized

Clear space equal to the flame glyph's height on all sides. On paper/sand backgrounds: wordmark in wine. On charcoal/dark backgrounds: wordmark in paper, flame stays gold always. Never stretch, rotate, shadow, or badge the mark. Favicon: the flame glyph alone on a charcoal or wine square.

The palette

Paper #FBF6EE Primary page background	Ink #211D1A Primary text on light surfaces	Charcoal #2A2622 Footer, dark overlays, admin shell
Gold #C6A15B Primary accent, buttons, flame mark	Gold deep #A9823F Hover / pressed state for gold	Wine #6E2A3A Wordmark, badges, seasonal tags
Sand #E4D8C3 Cards, inputs, dividers	Sage #5B6C58 Natural-ingredient badges only	White #FFFFFF Product photography cards

Accessibility

Ink on paper and charcoal-ink on charcoal both clear 4.5:1 contrast for body text. Never set small body text in gold — reserve it for large text, icons, borders and fills.

Fraunces + Work Sans

Fraunces (display) carries the poetic, hand-made character for headlines and product names. Work Sans (body) stays neutral so it never competes with photography. Never more than two typefaces on one screen; never bold Fraunces beyond weight 500.

07 · PHOTOGRAPHY & IMAGERY

Natural window light, warm color grade, shallow depth of field — no ring-light studio look as the primary style. Show the candle lit, in a lived-in setting, more often than bare product-on-white. Styling props pull from the palette (linen, ceramics, dried flowers); never a competing bright color. Always show one unboxing moment per collection.

08 · ICONOGRAPHY

Thin line icons (1.5px stroke), rounded caps. The flame glyph is the one recurring motif — favicon, loading state, section divider. Buttons/badges: full pill radius. Cards/modals: medium radius. Hero imagery: large radius. Never a sharp 0px corner anywhere.

09 · PACKAGING & LABEL COPY

Hierarchy: product name → scent notes in two or three words → burn time → one care line. Materials: kraft/matte boxes in paper or sand tones, one wine or gold foil-effect sticker bearing the flame mark, tissue paper in paper or sand. Avoid glossy lamination.

10 · APPLYING THE BRAND TO THE SITE

Paper for nearly the whole site; charcoal only for the footer and hero overlays. Gold for every primary call-to-action, including the floating WhatsApp button's resting ring (the WhatsApp glyph itself keeps WhatsApp's own green). Motion stays slow and gentle — 250–350ms ease — echoing candlelight, never bouncy app-like easing.

Do

Let photography and whitespace carry the page. Use gold sparingly enough that it still reads as special. Keep one poetic line per page; everything else plain and concrete. Show the hand-made process in photography and copy.

Don't

Don't use pure black or pure white as a page background. Don't add a second accent color for a single campaign without updating this system. Don't write body copy in Fraunces. Don't use countdown timers or urgency language. Don't let the flame glyph's color change across contexts — it is always gold.
